A cornucopia is a good thing to have about Thanksgiving time. What's inside generally appeals to the processor, but his or she would not object to the outside of such a delicate one as appears in John Zerk's window. It is as delicate as a cloud floating in the sky, and like the cloud it has a silver lining—a village so thick it drops off and takes the form of all kinds of kingdoms and empires, and all things one would like to have. It is such a corn of plenty that these things would be run out on one of Eddie Jones' polished and beautiful dining tables as a complement to the art. It is a great temptation to surround the turkey with fitting accessories, so stimulate the appetite to do justice to whatever graces the board, with the hope that the menu will contain some of the fruit that will keep the doctor away.
